

pellucid

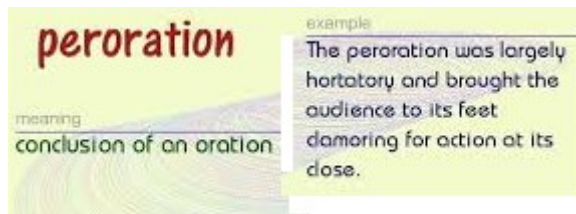

(adj.) very clear and shining

Usage: the pellucid light of a spring morning the pellucid water

very clear in meaning and easy to understand

Usage: He writes in pellucid prose.

peroration

(noun)

the concluding part of a speech, in which there is a summing up and emphatic recapitulation; a high-flown or bombastic speech

plangent

(adj.) (of sounds) deep, low, and expressing sadness

Usage: the plangent tones of the baritone sax sanguine

SANGUINE PERSONALITY

- ★ cheerful
- ★ curious
- ★ creative
- ★ optimistic
- ★ energetic
- ★ spontaneous
- ★ impulsive
- ★ assertive
- ★ goal-oriented

(adj.) cheerful, confident, optimistic

saturnine

saturnine

adjective | 'sætənɪn

MEANING: sad or gloomy

USAGE: The dog's eyes became saturnine whenever he was left at home alone.

(adj.) serious and unfriendly a saturnine character/look sententious

(adj.) trying to appear wise, intelligent, and important, in a way that is annoying; expressing much in few words;
short and pithy; pointed

Usage: The document was sententious and pompous.

stentorian

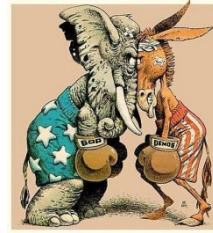

(adj.) using a very loud voice, or (of a voice) very loud

Usage: a stentorian preacher

Suddenly a stentorian voice boomed across the room.

tendentious

(adj.) (of speech or writing) expressing or supporting a particular opinion that many other people disagree with timorous

Mice are timorous creatures because they have many predators.

(adj.) timid, fearful, diffident, nervous and without much confidence tyro

(noun) a person who is new to an activity

Usage: I look forward to seeing this young tyro's next ballet.

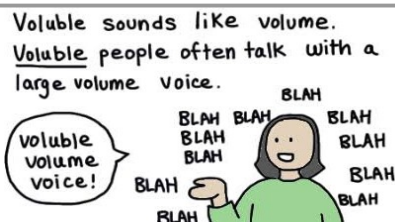

vitiate

(verb) to destroy or damage something, spoil or impair the quality or efficiency of.

Usage: He said that American military power should never again be vitiated by political concerns.

voluble

(adj.) speaking a lot, with confidence and enthusiasm, involving a lot of words spoken confidently and forcefully

Usage: She was a voluble, smart, funny interviewee.
Two people walked by having a voluble argument.
